

Dear Friends,

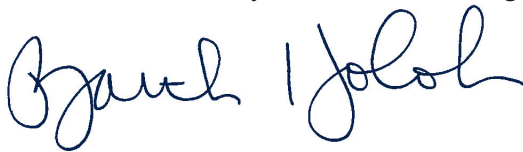

The fact that you are visiting this Web site tells me something.

It tells me that you, or someone you care about, is going through something that is making it difficult for them to manage all the tasks of day to day living. Perhaps it's something joyous—like the birth of a new baby. But it might also be due to injury, illness or the realities of the aging process. Whatever the reason, we are here to help, and we thank you for caring.

My interest in helping others started when I was a young man. I began by volunteering in retirement homes. Later, I became a healthcare consultant and received a master's degree in business and social work with a concentration in gerontology from Washington University in St. Louis. I also obtained a nursing home administrator's license, and worked in the operations of retirement communities.

These experiences taught me that many people just need help with every day living tasks; however, most prefer to stay in the comfort of their home. If that home is a retirement community, people do not want to move on to the next level of care. So, to help meet the needs I saw, I opened a home care company that provides care for life, care that most people need, when they need it, and where they want it. Take a close look at Continuum and you'll see that our company uses a process for finding caregivers and delivering home care services that is second to none in the industry. We are dedicated to improving the lives of those individuals with whom we are blessed to come into contact.

We welcome you to our Web site. I look forward to hearing your story. Please contact us today. We will do our best to help, no matter what need you have in what stage of life.
